

Central Park Nativity Scene Scores Victory Against War On Christmas

Bill in the news: Daily Caller:

The Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights set up a nativity scene Tuesday in New York City's Central Park, despite uproar over public religious displays.

The group erected the nativity display not only as an expression of the Christian faith and the reason for Christmas, but also to clear up confusion about the constitutionality of religious displays in public areas, according to a statement from the Catholic League. The nativity set will remain in the park because, despite past crusades against nativity scenes in public areas, religious displays on public property are constitutional, according to Catholic League president Bill Donohue.
