

CNN's 'Pope' Series Could Have Been So Much Better

Bill In the News (National Catholic Register):

Bill Donohue, the feisty president of the Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights, was critical of CNN's selection of Liam Neeson, a self-described former Catholic, to host the show. According to Donohue, Neeson was asked in an interview what he would like to ask Pope Francis. He answered, 'When will Mary Magdalene be canonized, and when can we have women priests?'
