

COVID-19 edicts drawing increased cynicism

Bill In The News: (One News Now):

Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights president Bill Donohue argues that political bias and wavering laws during the pandemic have warranted American citizens' cynicism about following COVID-19 recommendations and regulations.

Donohue maintains that even though the general public should ideally follow medical experts' precautionary guidelines amidst a pandemic, today's growing skepticism of health professionals and government officials' safety advice is predictable – given the obvious nature of the political motivation behind warnings, laws and inaccurate statistics that have often been recognized as scare tactics and alarmism.
