

Democrats Still Have a Religion Problem, Cory Booker Demonstrates

Bill in the news: Newsmax.com:

By a large margin, most Americans believe in God, and most are Christians. It would seem logical that both Republicans and Democrats would try hard not to alienate them, yet time and again the Democrats have managed to do so.

The latest example is New Jersey Senator Cory Booker. He blasted the president for mentioning religion in his State of the Union Address. "Here's a guy that used religion tonight to divide," Booker said.

Booker did not say whether it was Trump's pledge to protect people of every creed and religion that bothered him the most. Perhaps it was Trump's reference to "In God We Trust." Maybe it was Trump's remark about the need to have "confidence in our values, faith in our citizens, and trust in our God." No matter, Booker certainly made a name for himself: God-talk is taboo, at least if invoked by President Trump. READ MORE HERE
