

HBO KEEPS Bill MAHER

The corporate boys are so anxious to prove that they are not racists that they are flexing their moralistic muscles beyond recognition.

WarnerMedia, which is owned by AT&T, has said that it will pull "Gone With the Wind" from its HBO Max package. It objects to the film's "racist depictions."

It is too bad HBO is not opposed to "anti-Catholic depictions" as well. If it were, it would have shut down Bill Maher's HBO show years ago (just type his name into the search engine of the Catholic League for scores of examples).

WarnerMedia needs to condemn all expressions of bigotry, not just some.
