

MOJAVE DESERT CROSS STOLEN

Catholic League president Bill Donohue had the following to say about the Mojave Desert Cross found stolen today:

A 7-foot tall cross cemented with metal bolts to a rock has been stolen from an area surrounded by rattlesnakes hiding in rock crevices, and the National Park Service says it does not know whether the act was the work of scrap metal scavengers or those “with an interest in the case.” This is reminiscent of New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg who said last week that the Times Square bomber could have been acting alone in protest of the health care bill.

Someone needs to give the National Park Service a hint—this isn’t the work of bored teenagers or those who frequent hock shops. The cluelessness of our leaders is astonishing.
