

N.Y. Times columnist reportedly urged violence against pro-life students: 'Kick them in the head'

Bill In The News (Washington Times):

A New York Times op-ed columnist has reportedly advocated that pro-life students be attacked, spit on and kicked in the head.

When she was a student journalist at SUNY-Buffalo in the late-1990s, according to the Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights, Michelle Goldberg cheered pro-choice demonstrators who attacked a "cemetery of the innocents," a display of 4,000 wooden crosses to mark the daily number of abortions in the U.S. READ MORE HERE
