

Skin Cells Make Sense

The New York Times is reporting today that a Japanese professor has found a way to make skin cells work like stem cells, it makes untenable the argument that we must pursue federal funding of embryonic stem cell research. All along there have been signs that the scientific community would soon make moot the need to kill nascent human life so that others may profit, and now the evidence is conclusive.