

Walters' Lame Response to Today's New York Times Ad

On today's episode of "The View," Barbara Walters indirectly replied to the advertisement the Catholic League placed in the New York Times today. Coming back from a commercial break, she stated, "Listen, I have, we have been talking and I want to remind all of you that I am not responsible for anybody else's views except mine."

Must we remind Ms. Walters that as co-owner and co-producer of the show, she is not an innocent bystander? Rather, she is in a position to challenge any untoward comment made by her co-hosts about any group. That she chooses not to do so when Catholicism is bashed speaks volumes.

The advertisement below appeared in the op-ed pages of the June 12 New York Times:

